- 542 While McBride was testifying before Parliament’s ad hoc committee, ActionSA politician Dereleen James put it to him that, based on cellphone records, he had an affair with Paul O’Sullivan’s former employee, attorney Sarah-Jane Trent. James even said the pair used the nickname ‘Clippity Clop’ - a reference to one of them. McBride denied it. But when Trent later testified, she said they’d had a ‘semi-social relationship.’ Trent said it was not a romance, but rather something involving an attraction. She also insisted: ‘It wasn’t infiltration.’ Trent often broke down in tears during hours-long publicly aired testimony, explaining that it was a response to trauma.
